

FAULT-BASED AND STRICT LIABILITY

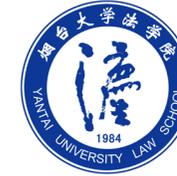

The fourth project in the cooperation between ETL, ECTIL and Yantai University (China) addresses the topic 'Fault-based and Strict Liability'. While it seems safe to say that all European legal systems, as well as the Chinese Tort Liability Law, endorse liability based on fault, they differ in their attitude towards liability in the absence of that foundation. A thorough examination of the relatively cautious use of strict liability found in the Chinese Tort Liability Law and the common law on the one hand, and the prominent support for it in influential Continental European jurisdictions on the other may lead to valuable new perspectives on the viability of commonly-used bases for strict liabilities. The project pays special attention to the use of rules reversing the burden of proving fault in Chinese and European statutes, which are sometimes considered to fall into a grey area between fault-based and strict liability.

At this public conference, contributors will present their most significant findings. The results will be published in English by Jan Sramek Verlag (Vienna) under the title 'Fault-based and Strict Liability. Chinese and European Perspectives'.

Please register with Lisa Zeiler (zeiler@ectil.org), preferably before September 30. The conference is free of charge.
